Let's Start!

What are all these spices? Are they for your curry?

Learning Outcome

Accurately use information about travel and vacations in social situations.

Ask your partner:

- Do you cook with lots of spices? Why or why not?
- Which spices do you use a lot?
- Which spice do you like the best?

Can Do Statements

- I can talk about food.
- I can give simple advice.
- I can express general quantities.

Let's Explore!

Vanessa is buying spices for her curry! What are they?

* "Curry" is a popular dish in Southeast Asian cuisine.

Instructions: Read the text aloud.

- Vanessa: I'd like to buy some chili peppers, please.
Clerk: Oh! You should be careful with these. They are very hot.
Vanessa: Yes, I know. I love spicy food. I'm going to make a delicious curry when I get home.
Clerk: What else would you like?
Vanessa: Those cinnamon sticks look fresh. I'd also like some ginger. Do you have any cloves?
Clerk: Here is some ginger and cloves. Would you like any coriander seeds?
Vanessa: Hmm ... I should get some of that. How do I bring the flavor out?
Clerk: Why don't you try heating them in a frying pan?
Vanessa: Alright.
Clerk: You should remove the seeds when you smell the aroma. How about adding some nutmeg?
Vanessa: Sure. What about some cardamom?
Clerk: We don't have any cardamom.
Vanessa: That's okay.

Let's Practice!

Some spices? Any spices? You decide!

Learning Points

Some and Any

The words some and any are quantifiers. They give information about the quantity or amount you have of something. They are used for count nouns (like "spices") and non-count nouns (like "food").

Some means a few or a little.

Any can mean none, a few or a little.

When you use any in a question, it means a few or a little. In a negative sentence, it means none.

Examples:

- I would like some ginger please.
- Do you have any cloves? = a few
- No, we don't have any left. = none
